The word "calico" has a queer

In climbing a ladder we can ascend one step only by letting go another; so all through life we can not take one upward step except by letting go the one we now stand upon. The child must loose his infantile grace, his winning ways, and something of his innocence, to become the sturdy, active, inquiring youth; and the youth in his turn must loose much of his bounding gayety and eager enthusiasm to gain the stability, breadth of view, and power of mature and intelligent manhood. So each species of happiness is gained by resigning some preceding one. The sensualist must give up the pleasure of vice ere he can know the delights of a happy home; the miser must resign the joy of counting his hoard before he can experience the happiness of a gen-erous affection. The scholar gives up ease for knowledge; the philanthropist loses many personal advantages to find a higher happiness. in others' good; the patriotic statesman lets go his private ambitions for his country's welfare.
